Email Onboarding Sequence — Draft Set

Three-message sequence for new clients or trial users of a remote support service

Sequence logic

Day 0 — Welcome & what happens next
Day 2 — One concrete value (how status updates work)
Day 5 — Soft invitation to share the first real task

Email 1 — Day 0: Welcome

Subject: You're set up — here's what happens next

Hi {{first_name}},

Thanks for starting. I'll work from written briefs, keep status visible, and flag anything unclear instead of guessing.

In the next 24 hours you'll get a short kickoff note with: confirmed scope, the channel we'll use, and the first deliverable date.

If you already have a task ready, reply to this email with the brief — even a rough one is fine.

— Uthman

Email 2 — Day 2: How updates work

Subject: How you'll see progress (without another meeting)

Hi {{first_name}},

A quick note on communication so expectations stay aligned.

I send short written status notes in this format:
Done · In progress · Blocked · Need from you

That keeps decisions fast and avoids long threads. If you prefer a different format, say so and I'll match it.

— Uthman

Email 3 — Day 5: First task invitation

Subject: Ready when you are — send the first brief

Hi {{first_name}},

Whenever you have a concrete task (data cleanup, research brief, content draft, or admin tracker), send the brief here. I'll confirm scope and turnaround before starting.

A useful brief includes: goal, any must-include details, deadline, and what "done" looks like for you.

Looking forward to the first delivery.

— Uthman

QA notes applied

• One primary CTA per email
• No unverifiable claims
• Personalization token only where natural

• Length kept under ~120 words body each

Uthman Abubakar · uthmanmote@gmail.com